A 41-Year-Old Woman With Shortness of Breath, Hematuria, and Lymphadenopathy

BACKGROUND
A 41-year-old woman presents to the ED with increasing shortness of breath and a nonproductive cough. Several enlarged, nontender cervical and axillary lymph nodes are noted.

What is the diagnosis?

HINT: Asymptomatic azotemia and proteinuria is often a part of the picture in this disease.

Case of the Week now offers you the chance to learn more about the conditions discussed. Follow the link in the case to view a slideshow about recognizing the signs and symptoms of this disease.

Review these other popular related case studies:

A Patient With Pneumonia and Arthralgias
A 61-year-old man presents to the ED with fever, dyspnea, worsening arthralgias, and a productive cough. Clubbing of the digits is noted. ACT scan of the chest is obtained.

What is the diagnosis?

Visit these additional MedscapeCME activities:
Unexplained Persistent Exertional Dyspnea in a 42-Year-Old Man

A 42-year-old man presents with dyspnea that has been worsening for the past 2 years and is associated with decreased exercise tolerance. CT angiography of the chest is performed.

What is the diagnosis?

Would you like to earn CME credit for these case studies? Start Learning Now!
Interested in submitting a case? Click here for information.

eMedicine’s Resource Centers offer a wealth of highly focused clinical content, valuable guidelines, a multimedia library, and patient education tools. Please take a moment to visit the following Resource Centers:

- Type 2 Diabetes Mellitus
- Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder
- Pneumonia
- Depression and Anxiety

Forgot your login info?
Unsubscribe from Medscape Case Studies newsletter.
Unsubscribe from all Medscape from WebMD mailing lists.
Need additional support?

Medscape from WebMD
Member Services
825 Eighth Avenue
New York, NY 10019